Columbia Pacific CCO Approach [\[hide this\]](#)

Columbia Pacific Coordinated Care Organization (Columbia Pacific, or CPCCO) exists to partner for healthy members and community well-being. With a primary focus on Oregon Health Plan enrollees, Columbia Pacific CCO invests in clinical and community capacity building for prevention, service integration, community-identified health priorities and health equity as core components of health care transformation. We recognize the importance of meeting immediate community needs while also working for changes in policies, systems and institutional practices that are barriers to transformative health practices. We recognize that this kind of change requires more than a single year's effort or a single organization's work. Therefore, we seek collective impact proposals, requiring organizations with aligned goals and efforts to partner with one another in innovation and creative ways. The proposals may also be multi-year efforts. We believe that collaboration between non-profit organizations, clinicals and agencies, those they serve, and other leaders and stakeholders are essential to systemic change. Columbia Pacific supports proposals that elevate both clinical and non-clinical community-based knowledge, local assets, and the voices of the populations being served. The full Application should include evidence of commitment between the lead organization and community or other partner organizations. Because of this, we strongly encourage organizations to engage in partner discussions prior to submitting a Letter of Intent.

Commitment to Justice, Equity, Diversity and Inclusion

As a foundation for Columbia Pacific's investment focus areas, we seek proposals that address health disparities and center on OHP members who are systemically marginalized. We require that all applicants answer the equity questions in the application, and also explore equity within the context of the applicant's own governance, leadership, policies, staff composition and resource allocation decisions.

Who We Do And Don't Fund [\[hide this\]](#)

Columbia Pacific will seek investments in organizations that:

- Are known contributors to local community health and well-being
- Have effective leadership that engages a base of community support
- Are committed to addressing equity and health disparities
- Demonstrate the administrative capacity, financial plan and multi-organizational commitment to achieve stated goals
- Believe in formal evaluation of their work and programs
- Value innovative and systemic approaches
- Include impacted individuals in defining the problem and proposed solutions
- Include data and evidence, where available, and demonstrate planning
- Leverage additional financial and in-kind resources

Columbia Pacific will not invest in

Lead organizations that are for profit Capital projects, other than on an exception basis as determined by the CCO Board of Directors Programs that represent more than 25% of an organization's annual budget Programs that have no evidence of or plan for financial sustainability once the CCO's investment ceases

Criteria We Use to Evaluate Proposals:

In order to be considered for funding, proposals must address the following: Financial Sustainability of the program upon cessation of CCO funding Specific Return(s) on Investment Measures of success or outcomes to be achieved Systemic or population impact Evidence or data supporting the program's likelihood of success Agreement to collaborate with others Collective impact across multiple organizations or sectors Degree of need for the program Priority will be given to proposals that address the largest number of the criteria, above.

Tax-Exempt Organizations [\[hide this\]](#)
